

Now this situation has been much food for thought. It is very hard to keep this one under control in my head. I put me on trial for my thoughts sometimes, and sometimes I feel I am really doing the right thing, even I don't know the thing I'm doing. This reminds me of that Escher drawing with the arches and staircases: the same drawing shows the same scene from two different perspectives and ALL of it is right...or wrong!

So if this situation doesn't end up with wedding bells for me, there are some things in me that are growing in a good direction. With Herman, it is totally easy for me to be with him; this is not that destructive infatuation of mine. With Peggy, our friendship has grown as we have gotten over our "stuff" - my infatuation and her reclusivity. Also, that I am even mentioning relationships at all is some growth. So we'll see if the attention will produce some results on the trip.

What I would like from this trip is: some sort of settling, patience and grace about the above situation; feel more in touch with my body, more on the pleasure side please; to have my experience of love (without the craziness) keep growing, to be more open to having a relationship, because Herman might not be the one when that dust all settles...would like to feel free and loving.